

OFFICE MARKET OVERVIEW

JEFF MOELLER, President

The final quarter of 2022 was dominated by the unknowns surrounding the economy and the Federal Reserve Funds rates that have been growing to combat the worst inflation in 40 years. With layoffs coming from Twitter, Meta, and Cisco; We can anticipate further pull back in the technology-based users in the city. With these layoffs we anticipate that the vacancy will continue to grow in San Francisco. This may cause landlords that are looking to refinance or sell in 2023 to be pushed harder than they have in the last 30 years. Better news is we are seeing a continued and growing interest from C-Suite executives to implement new methods to bring employees back to the office. With the vacancy increasing we may begin to see a broader group of tenants enter the market to take advantage of lower rents.
